On July 17, 2017, the trailer for the movie that would eventually be called Midnight Special debuted at the San Diego Comic-Con, accompanied by an appearance by star Michael Shannon as the film's main character, Roy. After the film's release, Shannon said of his experience making the movie, “I’ve done more in this movie in the last year than I have in the past 10 years of acting.” Shannon played a father who makes a bid to flee with his son, a child with special powers, in a bid to uncover the truth behind his son's abilities. The film was released on May 12, 2016, and opened to rave reviews from critics, who hailed the production as one of the best family dramas of the year. Following its release, the film has been compared to X-Men and Dunkirk. Universal Pictures picked up the US distribution rights to the film.
