fire-emblem-radiant-dawn-v1-01-usa-wii-hazma-t.html) (JTA) – A federal judge in California on Thursday ruled that the University of California system must pay a Holocaust education center $90,000 in legal fees. U.S. District Judge Jesus Bernal in Los Angeles ruled in favor of the Center for Israel Education, which has been fighting the university in court since 2017. The federal lawsuit, filed in 2017 against California State University and UC San Diego over a ban on the pro-Israel organization holding pro-Israel activities on campus, was thrown out last year. It involved the university's denial of accreditation to the Center for Israel Education, which operates in San Diego and Orange counties. The center's chief executive, Debra Milner, welcomed the verdict, saying that the organization had needed the funds from the case to continue its work of helping at-risk students. "It's a positive message to other academic institutions that the First Amendment right to free speech has not been superseded," Milner said in a statement. "I hope other universities will see what we have learned and recognize the value and importance of the free exchange of ideas on campus." The organization has said that the university system has never sought to censor its activities and the ban on the organization "is a blatant ploy to silence students." "We cannot sit back and say 'I'm not going to respond' to any of these attacks," said Milner, who has called the ban on pro-Israel activities "unconstitutional." In March 2017, Judge Bernal issued a preliminary injunction against the university, which prevented the ban from going into effect. The judge indicated that he would issue a final order if and when he determined that the university's ban on the pro-Israel center violated the First Amendment. When a final order was issued this past May, the defendants had until June 22 to respond. At that point, the defendant university had asked to postpone a decision on attorney's fees. "The parties have been in negotiations for several months in an attempt to reach a global resolution to this case. Unfortunately, despite attempts to reach an agreement, the parties have been unable to resolve the issues," the university said in
