Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an ink jet recording apparatus provided with recording means such as an ink jet recording head for ejecting ink. 2. Related Background Art An ink jet recording apparatus in which a recording head having a plurality of recording elements is placed on a head supporting member for supporting the recording head and is clamped with a head clamping member having a plurality of supporting parts for supporting the recording head for clamping is known. The clamping force of the head clamping member is adjusted to a predetermined value, whereby the recording head is clamped at a predetermined position and the recording elements of the recording head can be maintained in close contact with ink supply channels for ejecting ink from the recording head. In such an ink jet recording apparatus, there is a possibility that the recording head is clamped at an ununiform position, depending on the accuracy of parts forming the supporting parts for fixing the recording head and on the accuracy of a positioning of the parts. This will cause the recording elements of the recording head to be separated from the recording head or to be brought into contact with the ink supply channels, failing to eject ink. In the above-mentioned conventional art, the supporting parts provided for supporting the recording head are made of elastic material such as a soft metal, and the supporting parts are brought into contact with the ba244e880a
