Donor kidney biopsy: a national survey of U.S. transplant centers. A survey of U.S. transplant centers regarding their policies on donor kidney biopsy is reported. A questionnaire regarding donor biopsy was mailed to members of the American Society of Transplant Surgeons. Of the 239 transplant centers identified as having ongoing programs, 132 centers responded (55.2% response rate). Thirty-eight percent of responding centers performed donor kidney biopsy on donors with elevated serum creatinine. Of those, 17% felt the risk of the procedure was greater than the benefit of the information. Factors considered important in determining whether a donor biopsy should be performed were donor age, time of transplantation, donor clinical status, and donor surgical technique. Only a small percentage of donors had an elevated serum creatinine (1-2%). These donors were also more likely to undergo a donor kidney biopsy than donors with an uncomplicated clinical course. All respondents felt that a donor kidney biopsy was justified when performed on donors with a "complex clinical course."

Donor kidney biopsy is performed by a minority of U.S. transplant centers. The decision to perform a donor biopsy appears to be influenced by donor age, clinical status, and surgical technique. The general consensus among transplant center directors is that donor kidney biopsy is justified in donors with a complex
