When the event is triggered it creates a big zip file and sends an email to the user with a link to download it. I am creating the zip file as a response to the event. How can I check if the function is triggered and if triggered what is the response from the link after the function is called? The function will be triggered with the event "GetRecords" A: It's not clear to me what you're asking in your question. Do you want to know whether the event was triggered or whether the function actually sent the zip file? Regardless, if you actually want to listen for the event, the following is the code you would need to include in your function: import json def lambda_handler(event, context): #print event #print context zipFile = open("/tmp/foo.zip", "w") zipFile.write(json.dumps({ "foo": "bar" })) zipFile.close() If you want to know whether the function actually triggered the event, there's a CloudWatch metric, "Lambda Functions Triggered" which you can monitor in the console. If you're looking to send a file as a response, you can either use Amazon S3 (there are some limitations to the type of file you can put there, see the S3 documentation), or use Amazon Kinesis to listen for a "GetRecords" event and have the lambda function send a copy of the zip file to the Kinesis stream and return the "RecordId" value to the client. So there I was, minding my own business, having a pleasant morning with my coffees and going to throw a baseball to my kid, when suddenly my phone beeped with
