He's also a former boxer, a father, a doting husband, and a freelance writer. A one-time "bookworm," Michael's reading tastes have evolved. Now, he's thinking more like a cook. Michael Hoffman is a freelance writer based in Chicago. He specializes in art, music, literature, food, and fashion. He can also reportedly code. When not running off to yet another jazz club or bookstore, he writes about all of the above for a number of publications and websites. Description:The first fifty years of the 20th century saw the gradual destruction of the biosphere. Facing a world of incredible technological advancement and industrialization, will the 21st century be any different? Can we not use our vast advantages to avoid the wholesale destruction of life on earth?Q: How to use 'appearance' with select2? I'm trying to make my select2 box look and act like a typical select. The way I'm doing it now is a little unorthodox. Is there a better way to do this? `//...code $('select').select2({ width: '300px', appearance:'select2-appearance-styled', searchEnabled: true, dropdownParent: $('#myDiv') });`

March 18, 2020 – Barry Commoner, father of modern ecology, argues that manufacturing for profit creates dangerous ecological ramifications and offers a summary. This is important because the industry not only produces new pollution, but creates new pathways for it. For example, many of the chemicals used in manufacturing tend to end up in water and food, which in turn causes more pollution. As a result, the commoner, who was a botanist, created a project consisting of a series of essays that illustrate the impact humans have on the environment. fffad4f19a
