Category:SPICE (software)Q: Cisco router doesn't display join related interface if it is added after other interfaces I have a cisco router (ASR10004) configured with PPPoE, and I can see the interfaces (ppp0/0 and ppp0/1) at the IOS config screen, which is OK. I have two more interfaces, that I can't see at the IOS config screen (which I can't change I'm afraid): lo0 and en0/1. These interfaces all have static IP addresses. The problem is, that if I add the interface en0/1 to the configuration (and assign it a specific IP) in the IOS config screen, my ppp0/0 interface isn't displayed anymore. I can see it on the console, but the other interfaces are left out. If I add the ppp0/0 interface, the ppp0/1 interface is shown, and the en0/1 interface is shown, too. Can anyone explain to me why, and how can I get the three interfaces to show up in the IOS config screen at the same time? A: Try listing the interfaces as follows interface ip address ip access-group ip nat inside ip nat outside ip virtual-reassembly in shutdown By default, IOS configures the interface on a new line. Q: any possible to use ActionBarCompactSupport inside a fragment? I am trying to integrate a actionBar in my fragment. I've been trying to implement final View v = getView(); final ActionBar actionBar = ((ActionBarActivity) getActivity()).getSupportActionBar(); actionBar.setNavigationMode(ActionBar.NAVIGATION_MODE_TABS); but I get an exception saying I cannot use getActivity(), because I am in a fragment. Is there a workaround for this? Thanks. A: I think you are missing to initialize your view, check the below link with its explanations.
