May 16, 2019 Bentley AutoPLANT Plant Design V8i (SELECT series 3) v8.11.8.123. AGISOFT PhotoScan Pro 0.9 x86 BUILD 1542 PRE.rar A: Bentley's v8i does work with that software. It's just a matter of file compatibility, like anything else on your system. The file is simply not a supported file type for the software. I'd suggest trying to use a different compression type for your file (Bzip2, ZIP, RAR, 7z, etc.). Q: When try to install cuda driver I get this error 'No detected devices I just get the error: No detected devices when I try to install the cuda driver on ubuntu 18.04.1. Someone says that it's a problem related to the unclaimed devices and that there is an entry in grub to disable devices that are in use. I tried to find it and the command I found was the following: sudo grub-set-default -s I get the following result: grub-editenv: No configuration file found. grub-editenv: No configuration file found. grub-editenv: No configuration file found. sudo: invalid number of arguments I'm on a Mac computer, and it seems to be just a matter of installing the cuda driver on ubuntu. This should be easy but everytime I do that, I get that error. Someone with that same problem? A: So I found the solution to this problem: I had a UNCLAIMED DEVICE with this UUID: eb6f9015-3e73-42fe-9d1f-1dbaa6fc62b4 and by default GRUB will use the UUID as a parameter in the /etc/default/grub file So I used the command sudo grub-set-default 9d1f-1dbaa6fc62b4, and then sudo update-grub to generate the /boot/grub/grub.cfg This file is where GRUB will remember if that device is unclaimed or not. I can continue using CUDA in linux without the need to disable the device and I can do it by

Slocum, the secretary general of the Communist party in Hong Kong, told the march that he was "deeply shocked" by a second expulsion of pro-democracy protesters by the police, adding that "national security is not a joke, it is about your safety". Photograph: Eric Yip/Barcroft Images Two protesters were removed from the demonstration on Sunday at the mouth of the city's major Nathan Road shopping district, after allegedly being deemed a security threat. The march was organised to protest against the government and police's handling of the week-long protests that started in June and quickly descended into violence. Slocum, dressed in a bright orange T-shirt emblazoned with a slogan of his party, told the crowd on Sunday that he was here to send a message of support. "Support the protesters. Carry out peaceful protests. Don't block roads. Don't arrest people," he said. "We are fighting for our future," he said, adding that the Hong Kong government must be "sitting quietly and be ready for when the protest turns violent" ♦ ba244e880a
