KKopy provides the easiest way to select a portion of the text in a Microsoft Word document. KKopy allows you to select an area of text by simply moving your cursor over it and then pressing the select button. No need to highlight the text. You only need to select the text from where you place your cursor. The text is selected and moved to the clipboard and then copied to the clipboard. This is similar to the copy and paste commands in other Windows operating systems. You may now paste the selected text to any other part of the document that is highlighted. If you are working on a page layout, paste the selected text to the page layout or any other document and it will appear in the inserted area. Paste to: Text only - not in a page layout Page Layout (another page) Cut: Clipboard - copy to a new document Insert a new document - paste to the clipboard Press the select button without moving the cursor And press the select button without moving the cursor Use the left or right arrow keys to move the cursor Use the select button to select the text Press the select button without moving the cursor Copy the selected text to the clipboard and paste Now you can paste the selected text anywhere in the same document. You can use the Kopy filter to format the selected text before it is pasted. Want to see how it works? Try the demo. Download the free trial version of Kopy and give it a try. In Word 2007 and 2010, it is called Clipboard.Batchwise scalability of indirect calorimetry in metabolic chambers: evaluation and correction of gas exchange variability. Current procedures for the collection of gas exchange and metabolic data in human metabolic chambers (ICCs) introduce potential sources of error. We compared the accuracy of a battery-powered ICC with a reference open-circuit technique (OCT) for measurement of O2 consumption, CO2 production, respiratory quotient, and other variables in a metabolic chamber operating under steady-state conditions. In addition, we evaluated the effect of hardware and software variability on the results. Gas exchange (VCO2, VO2, and VCO2/VO2) was measured using the electrochemical technique in the ICC and the OCT. The intraclass correlation coefficients (ICC2,1) between the ICC and the OCT were >0.95 for VO2, VCO2, and VCO2/VO2, and between 0.85 and 0.99 for the respiratory quotient (RQ) (p
