RVT100 UML Report Design Overview [Show/Hide Design] Change Report: Desktop/Portable UML Report RVT100 UML Report Design Overview [Hide Design] I have been using the standard "x12sumparser" utility and there seems to be a problem with recent versions of Windows. It was working fine on my HP Laptop a few months ago but now, nothing. I have uninstalled, uninstalled, reinstalled, upgraded and reformatted the system but the utility is still not working as it should. Does anyone have any thoughts or experience in this area? I am using Windows XP SP3 and x12sumparser 9.0. A: I think the problem is that most probably you are trying to run it as a system administrator or some administrative user. I have found this document very helpful. If you have the "Run as different user" option enabled, and you attempt to run X12sumparser, the operation will fail, most probably with the following message: "Sorry, it appears that this version of X12Sumparser is not compatible with Windows. This utility needs to run as a user who has sufficient administrative permissions. Unfortunately, X12Sumparser was not installed under a user account with sufficient privileges. Do you want to view the compatibility information?" Click Yes if you want to see this information. If you are the system administrator or some administrative user then you have to use the X12sumparser running as administrator from the command prompt or by double-clicking the executable file. You will have to select the "Run as different user" option when launching the program from the Start -> Run or Start -> Control Panel -> Programs -> Accessories -> Command Prompt or Command Prompt. (if you have a different Windows version, the Command Prompt icon is likely to be found under Start -> Accessories -> Command Prompt.) If the system is set to "only allow the user to run the program while logged on as this user" option is enabled, then you will not be able to use the program if you launch it from the Start -> Run. Please note: even if your user is an administrator, in Windows XP the user account from which you launch a program always has the lowest privileges. The user account for which the utility runs is not the administrator and it has the highest privileges. If you want to launch the utility from the Start 1d6a3396d6
