3. Create a new document on a 200-pixel, 300-pixel image size in grayscale mode. It's better to start with a blank sheet to practice on. Create a new document on a 200-pixel, 300-pixel image size in grayscale mode. Because Photoshop's features are so complex, the fastest way to get acquainted is to use it on a practice document. 4. Open the Ellipse tool by clicking the Ellipse icon in the toolbox and clicking inside the document. The Ellipse tool creates a circle or oval shape based on your mouse clicks. To select a different shape, use the Pencil tool to select any area and then click again to create a shape. 5. Click and drag to the right on the document. Drag the cursor to the right and see how the image reduces. When you reach the left side of the document, the shape is complete. 6. Click the Direct Selection tool (the Lasso tool, in the Tools panel). 7. Hold the left mouse button down and click and drag to make a selection of the whole object and then release the button. Doing this with the Lasso tool selects all the inside of the object. You can use this to get a feel for working with elements. 8. Press and hold down the Backspace key on your keyboard and then click the Lasso tool again. 9. Click in the dark portion of the oval shape. The color of the picture changes to black in the middle and a grid appears to show where you clicked. You created the first selection by using the Lasso tool and then backspaced. 10. Click inside the image and drag to create a selection of the entire object. This creates the second selection and then you can select a path for further editing. The tools you select determine how a selection looks. 11. Select the Eraser tool in the Tools panel. 12. Click inside the image and drag to erase the first selection. 13. Click outside the image and drag to erase the second selection. You see the dark line of the second selection inside the original. When you're finished, the image looks the same as it did before. 14. Close the

UPDATE: Text and photos on cell phones are big business. Now a startup wants to make it easier. On Tuesday, the company Synchify will announce a $5 million Series A. The company, which was founded in May, has raised a total of $13 million so far. Synchify is introducing a white-label product today called Pingboard that companies can use to let people on mobile phones access their services. For the company, Pingboard signals a shift in its approach to business. While Synchify licenses the technology to help businesses connect their services to mobile phones, it makes money selling services to companies on its platform for 50 cents a customer. The company declined to say how many business customers it has, but its business Web site indicates that it works with more than 800 companies. About the author Eric Enge, CFA, is a partner with Macroscope and a contributing editor at CFO. He has also served as a director on the global investment committee of a New York-based, billion-dollar hedge fund. He is the former global technical strategist at Bridgewater Associates, one of the world's largest hedge funds. Comments JP6 is a true trailblazer and has been instrumental in bringing services like Google Adsense, YouTube, Facebook Ads, and even the mobile monetization market to life. I don't know anything else of the type of the service but I am super excited to see who else can find their own goldmine in this space. Hey that's cool. Thanks for the tip. I think the users of these services have a good idea of what they want their apps to be like. Some of it is the visual design of the app itself that can make or break the user experience. Pingboard is a prototype of what we will eventually be offering to our existing clients. We want to ensure our clients that we are already working on a product that will support what they will eventually be requesting. The pricing of our services are in a similar spot to what we plan on charging our clients. We have been working with companies that need to access their customers on mobile, and have been in the process of closing a series B round. While the value of bitcoin and other cryptocurrencies has increased in the past few days, prices for 2018's most popular cryptocurrency, Ethereum, have remained relatively stable. According to data from coinmarketcap, the price of Ethereum has held steady over the past

The human body is in flux, changing and remodeling, and is also subject to a process of aging. Because of this complexity, even in youth, the organ systems of the body change and become weak with age. Depending upon the severity of the dysfunction and/or the duration of the impairment, the patient may or may not be aware of the presence of disease, the patient may not know if the disease is deteriorating, the damage of disease may not be obvious, and the disability associated with the disease may not be observable until some irreversible damage occurs. Typically, many patients wait until they reach a symptomatic point in their disease before seeking medical attention, and once the patient does seek medical attention, the patient may have waited too long to treat, i.e., the disease may have already progressed to a stage that is irreversible. One system of the body which shows the aging process is the vascular system. As patients age, the arteries become stiffer, compliance decreases, and diastolic dysfunction occurs. Arterial compliance is an important measure of vascular function, and is measured by determining the arterial strain. Arterial strain is the difference in a circumferential dimension of a blood vessel between two points along the blood vessel. With age, the arteries lose compliance and become stiff. There is a limited ability of the arteries to change in size such as to accommodate increases in cardiac output. Normally, the vascular system enables the arteries to expand and contract with volume changes, and the increased distention reduces the blood pressure so that the heart can pump adequately. However, the arteries have a limited ability to change diameter as a consequence of normal structural aging. Further, the normal aging process is exacerbated with conditions such as hypertension, diabetes, dyslipidemia, and hyperhomocysteinemia. Coronary artery disease is an important cause of morbidity and mortality. In fact, atherosclerotic cardiovascular disease is the leading cause of death in the United States today. Treatment of coronary artery disease, and particularly of coronary heart disease, has evolved over the past few decades. At one time, open heart surgery was the only effective treatment. Coronary artery bypass surgery (CABG) is still a common procedure for the surgical treatment of heart disease. Since its introduction in the early 1960's, CABG has evolved to a highly sophisticated operation in which the heart is anesthetized using cardioplegia, the patient is on full cardiopulmonary bypass, and stopped during the operation. As such
