If you are using an Exchange Server, there should be an option to "Backup and Restore" under the "Server Settings" option. Then, open the "Backup and Restore" section and select the "Offline data backup" option. This option will make your computer a network server, which will allow your device to connect to it and synchronize Outlook folders that you want to backup. After entering the correct domain credentials and save them for future use, open the "Backup Outlook Folders" section and select the "Folder(s) to back up" option. You can either back up all Outlook folders in one go (recommended) or select the Outlook folders you want to back up. The only thing that you should be careful of is to select the right scope; if you select the wrong Outlook folder or folders, you won't be able to access to them later on. You need to make sure that the device you will use to back up the Outlook data has enough memory. There's nothing that you can do if you don't have the right Memory Card or Flash drive for the size of the Outlook data you want to back up. If you are running Windows XP/2000/2003
