A: I have not used this software in awhile so I'm not sure if the program is still in production. However, in the future, you could create a Virtual Machine using Microsoft Virtual PC or something similar and run the software on that. This would most likely be more stable and will allow you to debug and trace the application. The development of colposcopy in China. In China, cytologic and histologic examinations of the cervix and in vitro human papillomavirus (HPV) testing has been in use in gynecology clinics for over 10 years. The acceptance of colposcopy using magnifying instruments and biopsy during the past two years has expanded the use of colposcopy in the diagnosis of cervical intraepithelial neoplasia (CIN) and cervical cancer. This paper presents a brief review of the first 17 years' experience of colposcopy in China as well as a follow-up on the current status of colposcopy in diagnosis and treatment of cervical diseases in China. (since we are in the energy-dependent regime), we would obtain the less stringent bound $E \gg 10^{-5} \, T_H$. Therefore, it would seem that in the energy-dependent regime, the potentially positive answer to the main question would turn out to be negative, for the simplified form of Eq. would have a residual negative term. This explanation does not make sense, since the simplified form of Eq. is the statement of a theorem, and this theorem guarantees the positivity of the result. In other words, the simplified version of the theorem remains unaltered under changing of the form of the constraint function, at least in the energy-dependent regime. Moreover, also in the energy-independent regime, the simplified form of the theorem guarantees the positivity of the result, as can be verified from Eq. . Even in the energy-dependent case, the equation remains the same in the limit of energy-independent constraints, that is, in the limit $E_{\rm R} \to 0$. If the theorem is valid and the result is positive, the simplified form of the theorem is guaranteed to be valid. [^1]: The derivative of a function $f(\ell)$ with respect to the parameter ℓ is denoted by $f'(\ell)$. [^2]: This is not to say that the energy-independent form is more
