As the Cincinnati Bengals looked on at the Super Bowl last night, they were busy preparing for the future as well as they can. Those prepared for a new era included fifth round pick Kenny Hill, who threw for 53 yards, a touchdown, and an interception in the 15-6 road win over the New Orleans Saints, and signee Devon Cajuste, who bounced around the league before earning a roster spot with the Bengals in 2018. There may have been no more important free agent signee of the last two offseasons than Cajuste. The term is still somewhat muddied in the draft community, but an undrafted free agent has a better chance of signing with a team than not signing at all. And among those who eventually signed with an NFL team, Cajuste was among the most highly touted. He was the 22nd player off the board in 2016, two rounds after fellow Stanford University alum and then-Bengals quarterback Sean Mannion. When Cajuste didn't sign, his family moved from San Diego, where he grew up, to Nashville, where his parents are from. "The family moved here in '13 for me to go to college, for it to be close to the family and stuff," Cajuste told NFL.com. "Everything just kind of lined up and worked out." Cajuste's college career ended with a sixth-place finish in voting for the 2016 Heisman Trophy, and his pro career with the Buffalo Bills has been a whirlwind ever since. He had a few starts and some short stints
