To determine the safety and efficacy of bariatric surgery for severe obesity, a randomized controlled trial was conducted comparing laparoscopic gastric bypass with a purely medical approach. A total of 326 non-diabetic (149 women, 177 men) and non-pregnant (n = 307) adults with obesity (body mass index = 45 to 60 kg/m²) were enrolled in the study. Patients received either a standard medical treatment only or an intensive medical treatment including a diet, exercise program, sibutramine, orlistat, liraglutide, or lorcaserin. The primary end-point was weight loss, including improvement in co-morbidity, which occurred in 80% of surgical patients vs. 66% of controls at three years (P
