It might just be me, but I can't put my finger on why, but I've just always been ok with Ctrl+Alt+Delete, and I don't really want to have to put in half the effort to configure and configure it even more. As an aside, any alternative other than Citrix I should be looking at? Any suggestions, thoughts, or advice would be greatly appreciated. A: I don't want to start any trouble in here, or ruin anyone's day, but I've just given up on this and gone back to using QuickTime Pro, which allows you to switch off the annoying default "capture a whole screen" thing, but has support for some file types, among other things. You can even drag the video recording's file out of the QuickTime Player to a folder on your desktop. It allows you to see all of your open windows/programs at once, and allows for switching between them all. It doesn't have as smooth of a performance as I'd like, but that's to be expected. It seems to work without any hassle. Hope this helps someone. The New York Times says it suspended reporter James Risen after he refused to name his source for a book about a botched CIA agent bust operation in Iran, saying his life would be in danger if he did. The newspaper says it also suspended reporter David Sanger for six weeks for "conduct that cannot be justified." The company says he divulged state secrets by interviewing another reporter who broke the Iran story. After announcing the suspensions Monday, the company was mum on the issue, saying "we're not going to talk about specifics." The move comes after Risen and Sanger were named Time magazine's 2006 "Persons of the Year." The agency said Risen's reporting won a Pulitzer Prize and the Edward R. Murrow Award.
