procedureQ: Alternative to "onQuestionClick" that can be used instead of "onClick" My WebView is being manipulated by a third-party library that I cannot change. This library manipulates the WebView using listeners that are similar to this: `webView.addJavascriptInterface(new WebViewInterface(), "WebViewInterface");` The internal methods of the interface include onQuestionClick, which is being called in the following manner: `webView.loadUrl("javascript:WebViewInterface.onQuestionClick("Hello World"))`; Unfortunately, this is not an option for me, as I can only add listeners in a limited fashion; for example, the HTML code can be added directly to the DOM as it is, but I cannot add any listeners. In this case, how would I go about calling onQuestionClick? A: The WebView interface is a way to hook the WebView. It does not have to be a friend class. `WebViewInterface` could be a standard Android class which adds an interface to the WebView. Then you would implement that interface. I believe it would look something like this: `public class WebViewInterface implements`

WebView.JavascriptInterface {

    @Override public void

onQuestionClick(String question) { //do

    whatever you want } } Q: Javascript bookmarklet not filling form I'm working on creating a javascript bookmarklet for when I'm in bed and I'm too tired for any work but an idea comes to me and I need to figure it out. My url Now, I want to be able to visit the url above and type in a number, say 3, and enter. Ideally, I'd like a javascript bookmarklet to follow, but I don't have the know-how right now. The problem is that the form is never filled. It successfully gets submitted, but when I look at the response in firebug, the contents of the form are not there. Any ideas? PS: Just to clarify, I have actually tried this, but the form was not filled. I wrote the form just so that I could figure out how to get it to fill.
