A brief History of Photoshop Photoshop's roots date back to the late 1980s and early 1990s. In 1989, Charles Larus and Thomas Sholley, both graduates of Stanford University, developed a low-cost scanner. This scanner became the basis of their first software product, a bitmap graphics editor. In 1990, they launched Macromedia's first major product, the Macromedia Disc Publishing System, or DTP, which eventually became Flash authoring software. In the late 1990s, the Macintosh platform had good graphics card support. Adobe released its first Photoshop product in 1997, and Adobe retained the name "Macromedia" rather than "Adobe" for the Mac-only version. In 1998, Adobe announced Photoshop CS1 at the Professional Imaging Conference in New York. At that point, it was the first professional-grade vector graphics editor available for the Mac. In May of 1998, the company went public and grew its business steadily during the 2000s. However, it was slow to bring several Photoshop products to the Windows platform, including Photoshop Essentials, Photoshop ImageReady, Photoshop Elements, and Photoshop Lightroom. They made serious inroads in the design market with inexpensive Photoshop products that included a "non-destructive" (lightweight) version of the software. In June 2002, Adobe acquired the Photoshop Lightroom product, offering customers a bundle of low-cost products for a lower cost. In addition, Photoshop products became available for the iPhone and iPad and in July 2009, Adobe released Lightroom Mobile. In 2011, Adobe acquired Behance, a company that sells image-editing software called PicMonkey. In late 2011, they introduced Lightroom Classic CC, designed for beginners but well suited for use with the aging Macintosh platform. In July 2013, the company introduced Photoshop Elements 14.0, the version for the new Mac and Windows platforms, and announced the availability of the Touch app for iPad and Android tablets. In March 2015, Adobe announced the most significant changes in the company's history. They rebranded the software as Photoshop and announced new versions for the Mac, Windows, iOS, and Android platforms. The History of the Adobe Suite Adobe has been the driving force behind the introduction of new platforms and software, but at the same time, its product lines have been evolving. In the mid-1990s, Adobe's dominant products were in graphics and vector

Q: Why does `to_json` change the type? {:@record,[{:foo,1},{:foo,2}]} => {:@record=>[{:foo=>1}, {:foo=>2}]} I would have expected [{:foo=>1}, {:foo=>2}] But then I tried to_json and things get a bit weird: {:@record,[{:foo,1},{:foo,2}]} => "{"@record":[{"foo"=>1},{"foo"=>2}]}" Why? A: to_json is not the same as to_s. In your example: {:@record,[{:foo,1},{:foo,2}]} => {:@record=>[{:foo=>1}, {:foo=>2}]} to_json([{:foo,1}, {:foo,2}]) => "{"@record":[{"foo"=>1},{"foo"=>2}]" to_s([{:foo,1}, {:foo,2}]) => "{:foo=>1, :foo=>2}" A: In Ruby, to_s is overloaded to work for some built-in types like " String", " Bignum", and " Fixnum", so... to_s representation of Fixnum is the same as its default representation, i.e. it is " 0" to_s representation of Bignum is " 0b00000011" ...and this is why the output of both of the examples above is {:foo=>1}. However, to_json has a different default representation for non-primitive types -- i.e. Objects. Intravenous injection of an activated factor X-specific prothrombinase inhibitor does not promote thromboembolism or systemic hypercoagulability after stroke. The two most promising agents for the prevention of thromboembolic events in patients with ischemic stroke have been the platelet GP IIb/IIIa receptor antagonist and the prothrombinase inhibitor. Thrombin-specific agents may be superior to non-specific inhibitors. We therefore compared the risk of thromboembolic events, including stroke, after intravenous injection of pro no responsibilities for anything. They got some votes of a really sticky substance in Sweden, no problem. They can walk the party line with every other government, so we can put money into the COS's bank account. Then they can say 'Oh it was all a misunderstanding. You see that's how governments are, you should have been clearer about what you wanted to do.' "The government gets all the jobs back and the opposition have a chance to have a refund," Jansson concludes, "and if the opposition has enough courage they can go back to their constituencies and say 'Look, I said we didn't want this to happen, it's my fault that it did happen but it's all in the past and we're sorry that it did happen and you should give us your money back'. "Either way the COS and the coalition will vote and say 'No more coalition,' they'll get to do another deal and get a bigger payment. There's nothing wrong with that. A coalition like that is fair, it's totally consistent and it's what our voters want." The COS took the UK by storm in the general election, moving from nowhere to second place in just a few months and supplanting the Conservatives in Scotland. Now it wants to build on this success and kick the Conservatives out of office. Jansson has a theory that at some point in the past someone must have made a promise to the Scots that they'd give them back self-government, then broken that promise. "When he [Alex Salmond] first stood for election," he says of the former Scottish First Minister, "they said 'We'll give you back the National Health Service', but then they've done a U-turn on the NHS. "They've promised to give people a refund in the Energy Bill and their Energy Secretary is now saying 'What was that all about?' and they're also going to have a referendum on it. "That's what they've done before. The original National Health Service Act of 1946 said that it would be available to everyone and it became known as the National Health Service. The 1997 Act says that it's available
