Q: What is the most efficient way to access child assets in Unity3d? I'm trying to access child assets from a parent asset, but I'm not seeing a good pattern for doing it. I would like to do it the most efficiently possible, but I'm not even sure what I should be searching for. I'm using an array so I can easily access the children. I have the following code:

```
public static Int32[] children = new Int32[2]; public void OnUpdate() { ++childCount; AssignChildToParent("Child" + childCount); children[0] = Object.FindObjectOfType(); children[1] = Object.FindObjectOfType(); } public static void AssignChildToParent(string name) { Object obj = Object.FindObjectOfType(); if(children[1] == null) { children[1] = obj.AddComponent(); } children[1].sharedMesh = (GameObject)obj.transform.FindChild(name).gameObject; }

 This code works great, but I was hoping for a more efficient way of doing it. Perhaps there is a better way to structure the code or a better way of searching the "children" list. Any suggestions would be appreciated. A: You should really use the `UnityEngine.Object.FindObjectOfType()` method to find your object. d0c515b9f4

Youtube/tarrynL-FABP stimulates pancreatic alpha-amylase expression via an aspartyl protease-independent pathway in pancreatic acini. L-FABP is an intracellular protein known to be released in the circulation in response to tissue injury. We report here that L-FABP stimulates pancreatic alpha-amylase expression and secretion, and that the stimulatory effect of L-FABP on the release of amylase is dependent on the duration of exposure to L-FABP. Kinetic experiments showed that L-FABP stimulates amylase expression and secretion in a time-dependent manner, and that induction of amylase is gradual and starts at 10 min after L-FABP treatment and reaches a plateau after 30-40 min. The action of L-FABP is not mediated by DNA synthesis as shown by studies with actinomycin D. Furthermore, L-FABP stimulates amylase transcription as well as its translation. The addition of protease inhibitors that were not completely effective in inhibiting stimulated amylase secretion also abolished the capacity of L-FABP to stimulate amylase secretion. To gain insights into the mechanism by which L-FABP regulates pancreatic acinar cells, alpha-amylase promoter construct containing the -1251 to -928 region of the rat alpha-amylase gene was used. Functional analysis of the alpha-amylase promoter indicated that L-FABP was able to induce the reporter gene expression and amylase secretion. These studies suggest that L-FABP can activate pancreatic alpha-amylase expression via an aspartyl protease-independent pathway.
