License: [url= [/url].Effect of androgen deprivation on the prostate cancer cell line DU145: the role of androgen receptor signaling and focal adhesion kinase expression. Among men with prostate cancer, androgen deprivation therapy (ADT) is commonly used for the treatment of metastatic disease. The mechanisms of growth promotion of human prostate cancers during androgen deprivation are unclear. One candidate mechanism is induction of focal adhesion kinase (FAK). Here, we investigated the response of the androgen-dependent prostate cancer cell line DU145 to ADT by measuring proliferative and invasive potential and FAK expression. The androgen receptor (AR) agonist 5-alpha-dihydrotestosterone (DHT) augmented DU145 proliferation and cell migration, which were inhibited by DHT antagonists (50% inhibitory concentrations = 0.11 and 0.3 micromol/L, respectively). DHT increased FAK expression and activation, and silencing of d0c515b9f4
