Delimage KépaA judge has ordered the Church of Scientology to provide psychiatric tests to a woman who claims she suffered physical and mental abuse at the hands of her former spiritual leader. Justice Eleanore Logan of the New South Wales Supreme Court was given the decision at a hearing today in front of a jury at the behest of Scientology's most famous adherent and her attorney, Anne Bremner. The nine-day trial concluded Tuesday. Church spokeswoman Karin Pouw said the order, which also requires Scientology to produce a psychiatrist to examine the woman known as "Katie", is not a finding of guilt. "We've gotten our day in court," said Mr. Pouw. The proceedings revolve around two of Scientology's most notorious controversies. The first is the testimony of former Scientologist Leah Remini, a former church member who has spoken publicly about her own experiences of mistreatment. The second is the story of David Miscavige, then an international church spokesman known as the "ecclesiastical leader of the Scientology religion." According to the woman's testimony, Miscavige

Restoration You can restore the system. Your question or comment don't have an answer yet? Fake news Are you a “fake news junkie?” If you said yes, you are in good company.

According to a recent poll, a record high 30% of Americans get their news from social media.

Looking for a more reliable source of news? You might want to start by keeping an eye on the news websites and blogs that you read regularly. Unfortunately, the news on social media sites like Facebook and Twitter are often misleading, deceptive, or simply false. The biggest problem with fake news is that it spreads like wildfire on social media because: Controversial and polarizing stories get more clicks People who are “liked” by the author, share, or like stories get more exposure Fans and followers get more attention from the authors of the stories they share In other words, fake news can quickly become a self-fulfilling prophecy that propagates itself even further. So how can you tell if a post is real? Follow these steps to ferret out fake news: Check the author's Twitter or Facebook page, and read the About page to confirm they are who they say they are Do a reverse search to see if the source is being mentioned in other social media posts by real news sources Is the title misleading or too click-baity? Does the article go out of its way to inform readers that the author is an author? Will comments or followers of the author confirm that
