I'm on Ubuntu 10.04 and I have followed the instructions in and and it seems to work. When I type youtube.auth and hit tab, a dropdown comes with my account name and appears to select it. When I hit enter, it brings up the OAuth 2 window. But on the website it says that the browser should redirect to the /oauth2/authorize?... URI with the client's authorization code, which doesn't happen. I just get the OAuth 2 window, which has a generic "please let us know what you're doing" popup and then the error page which says "There was a problem with your request." I can log in to YouTube perfectly well using my account, so it seems to be just a Python problem. And there's lots of references for this particular problem online, but nothing I've found seems to work for me. A: I have been through this error and was able to solve it. Following the API tutorial on the official Python YouTube v3 page works. Q: How to get error message from `super.setState()`? In the React Stateful Router example, the method `render()` on the `App` component calls `super.setState()`, which sets the state to the current state, and then renders the `App` component again. However, when I set the state to the current state, I can't tell what's wrong and get the associated error messages. How can I get error messages from `super.setState()`? A: You can wrap your `setState` in a try catch block if you want to handle that case differently. Here is an example of it: `update(e) { try { this.setState({` directory, but it's showing in the location bar When I tried to import a local file from my disk, it's not showing at all, but when I open it with Firefox's location bar, it shows the file: But, I'd like to import the file directly and don't want to open it with Firefox's location bar. There is no.htaccess and nothing about permissions in the file. A: Make sure that you didn't break the permissions by accident with hex editor or text editor. The data's permissions are set to 600 for unreadable + writeable files. This means that it can be read by all the users that can read your local disk and write into it (you, group or all other users). This mean that your program is not able to read the data, because it needs write permission to read the data.

Make sure you set the proper permissions (and hard permissions) on the file before you try to import it (unpack the archive, see what it says about permissions etc. and set them up):

`chmod 666 yourfile` Anyway, even if you would get it working, it's not something useful.

Toward an anatomy of the abdominal wall in lumbar hernioplasty. Prosthetic material is used for the repair of lumbar hernias. Because of the high cost of the primary prosthetic, surgeons are tempted to use small size prosthetic under similar preoperative conditions. When there is a size mismatch between the synthetic prosthesis and the hernia site, the procedure may fail. This study presents a detailed analysis of abdominal wall anatomy in order to clarify the effects of several factors on the choice of the size of the synthetic prosthesis to be used for the repair of lumbar hernias. For this purpose, the abdominal wall was studied on 20 cadaveric specimens fixed in a "cadaveric" position. The costal edge was identified and the muscular components were studied histologically and histomorphometrically. For each specimen, four areas were evaluated, which differed according to the hernia size, the abdominal wall structure, and the presence of the costal transversus aponeuro
