The stone was given as a gift from a lord or a king in a meeting ceremony to a vassal in Vietnam. Today they can be found in various museums throughout Vietnam. History The stone was given to anyone who is in debt to a lord in the Hoa Lac era, and it has been shown that the stone was more valuable than gold. The stone was first reported in 1908 by a French nationalist, Séraphin François de Bascoeur, in his book La Chine. Description The stone is first modelled into the shape of a Buddha, and then a crown ornament is added to represent the ruling power. It can vary in size from 50 cm to 100 cm in length and width, and weighs from about 250 kg to 500 kg. In the People's Republic of Vietnam, the stone is considered a national treasure and enshrined at the Bảo tàng Thời đồng Hà Nội in Hanoi. The museum is a registered third-class cultural relic with the number 18-006. There was once a Batang stone in Dang Thong Palace in Hanoi. It now resides in the History Museum. There is also a Batang stone in Bao Tong's temple in Hanoi. A total of 12 children with progressive encephalomyelitis with rigidity and myoclonus were identified between 1989 and 2000. The mean age at onset was 4.8 years. The average duration of follow-up was 4 years. Rigidity was the most common motor manifestation, followed by myoclonus. Sensorimotor cerebellar features were present in the majority of cases. Interestingly, 9 children had a disease onset in the late afternoon or evening hours, and 4 children had no apparent precipitating event. All children were receiving a potent immunosuppressant at the time of evaluation. Six children had been treated with azathioprine, 1 with methotrexate, 1 with cyclosporine, and 4 without immunosuppressive medications. Three children had experienced an initial steroid response, 4 had shown disease stabilization, 4 had shown an initial disease progression, and 1 was lost to follow-up. The unique course of children with this disease should prompt rheumatologic and pediatric neurologist communities to consider this illness in their differential diagnosis. Given its history (the Bronx), ample winning (four pennants and three championships), and storied sports scenes, the city of New York is a perfect spot for a baseball museum.
