The introduction of "HyperMotion" Technology powers the new FIFA 22 demo available through UPlay and the EA SPORTS™ FIFA World Tours landing page on Xbox Live and PlayStation Network. The demo allows players to experience the new features of FIFA 22, including the new play styles, tactical free kicks, and mode-specific gameplay for the "Tactics" and "League" modes. HyperMotion Technology powers the new "Motion-Controlled Offensive Play" that introduces brand new skill moves that are controlled by players' body movements. The new FIFA "First Touch" control allows players to effectively take and pass the ball at any time within their offensive phase by simply making a quick upward flick of the controller. HyperMotion Technology provides deeper, more realistic ball physics, allowing players to control the trajectory of the ball in a completely different manner. "Fouls" and "touches" on the ball are more challenging, and better imitates how the ball behaves in real-life. Furthermore, HyperMotion Technology makes the game more authentic to real-life, by enabling ball-work in the air. HyperMotion Technology is the foundational technology for powering the new "Heel," "Rake" and "Wing" play styles. Heel play focuses on stretching the entire field and creating a greater number of chances in the final third of the field, aiming to overwhelm the opposition by maintaining a high pressure on the ball throughout the entire game. Heel play demands greater agility in players, particularly in off-the-ball activities where players must be able to make quick, low-risk decisions in order to make attacking plays. Rake play involves running the ball from deep from players with a high-speed dribble, drawing both fullbacks forward and creating a bigger gap between the defensive lines. Rake play does not involve close control, hence requiring players to make more instinctive decisions, in turn being "faster and niftier" players. Wing play involves being very creative with dribbling moves and through balls, especially from wide areas in the outfield where space is created. The opponent will be unable to recover from the immediate aerial threat. Wing play typically requires the skill of a passer and finisher who moves with the ball into the penalty area, scoring and adding goals. The "Heel, Rake, and
