The present study was designed to evaluate the efficacy and safety of a single-dose administration of teicoplanin followed by penicillin G treatment for early-phase (prior to abscess formation) methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus aureus (MRSA) skin and skin structure infections (SSSIs). SSSIs were defined as uncomplicated cellulitis, erysipelas or fasciitis in depth, with or without abscess formation. A total of 179 patients enrolled in 24 centres were allocated to receive a single intravenous injection of either 3 mg/kg of body weight teicoplanin (n = 91) or 7.5 million units of penicillin G (n = 88). Among the teicoplanin-treated patients, the resolution rate was 81.2% (n = 70/86) at visit 2 (7 days after treatment) and 92.9% (n = 84/90) at visit 3 (14 days after treatment). In the penicillin G-treated patients, the resolution rate was 70.6% (n = 55/79) at visit 2 and 76.5% (n = 65/84) at visit 3. The proportion of patients with bacterial eradication at day 7 was slightly higher in the teicoplanin-treated group compared to the penicillin G-treated group (91.0 vs. 81.0%, p = 0.085). No differences in terms of local or systemic adverse events were observed. In conclusion, the present results indicate that a

That includes Donald Trump, who appeared to express particular enthusiasm for the “therapeutic use of radiation” at a Republican rally in New Hampshire in 2016. However, other world leaders are still decidedly less impressed. On Monday, the UN has called for a ban on nuclear weapons testing by all countries. And the latest research indicates this matter is getting even more serious, as the use of nuclear weapons in the Syrian conflict has now risen to the same level as the threat of the terrorist group Islamic State. A large proportion of artificial intelligence (AI) achievements are already so advanced that they can be considered a form of “human exceptionalism” – characteristics of the human mind or brain that set us apart from other species. Now, a team of researchers from the UK and Israel have developed a new AI-based method to create “augmented” humans, which can execute numerous tasks simultaneously. A new study from Stanford University in the US has suggested that chimps, apes, and humans are all capable of understanding and reasoning about the same topics, despite differences in the
