Further observations on immunological, and ultrastructural aspects of the digestive tract in the newt, Notophthalmus viridescens, using light and electron microscopy. The technique of serial sectioning was used for examining and comparing the ultrastructure of the digestive tract in the newt (Notophthalmus viridescens) with that in the toad. Within the stomach, the inner epithelium of the newt contains intensive cytoplasmic processes between the cells which are connected with the cytoplasm in the luminal layer of the epithelium (gland cells). Similar gland cells are also present in the toad. In the newt, surface mucous glands are present in the gastric glands of the stomach and more diffusely distributed around the gland. The glands of the newt are present in the stomach but are arranged like those of the toad at sites deeper in the organ. Other structural details of the newt stomach are compared with those of the toad. Ask HN: Google Hangouts suggests inviting others only if I have no avatar - aboodman I find this annoying because it's a long process and I often forget to tell people about it. When someone actually messages me, I'm able to reply quickly. Are there any existing solutions for getting around this? ===== dutchbrit I think that's mostly a timing thing. If I want to have a conversation with someone, I don't want to invite my 13000 friends to a so called 'conversation', I want them to message me and we can start something with them. ~~~ aboodman That's what I thought but it seems to happen on both good days and bad. Also, it seems like it only happens in private hangouts, not in mixed public/ private or public hangouts. It's hard to keep track of who is in your "inner circle" and it's often not possible to find people with an email address. ----- veddox I believe that this is why it only happens when you have no avatar. If you do have an avatar, they must be able to identify you by that, which will result in far less suggested people. Another possibility might be that the latency makes people more willing to accept invitations than when you have a fast, reliable connection. ----- AndrewWarner I think

Q: How to free list in heap in LISP How to free list in heap in LISP? So that I can have my code run clean without exception?

A: The standard LISP heap is an ordered vector of pointers to cons cells. It's obvious that you can't free some object from such a memory pool; if you tried to do so, then the list of the cell pointers would be out of sync (that is, the list would contain pointers pointing to existing objects that the object you are trying to free would have been deallocated). It's possible to have a number of such storage mechanisms: A linked list of vectors; A tree of vectors; An array of vectors; A sorted vector of vectors I suspect that in a nutshell, the array is the one you want. Ethanol has a well-known deleterious effect upon the oral musculature: painful dry mouth, irritated gums, and progressive loss of dental hard and soft tissues. Clinicians are only now seeing the consequences of this problem, and have been struggling with how to minimize the effects of ethanol on the oral musculature without impeding the patient's ability to consume a clinically adequate daily dosage of oral medications. An effective solution to this problem would allow the clinician to safely administer a larger daily dosage of an oral medication to the patient, while minimizing the patient's exposure to ethanol and its associated problems. This approach has been addressed by investigators as the "swallowing and digesting (SAD) regimen". This study will evaluate the effects
