Development and Standardization of a Novel, Static Environmental Chamber for Simulating PEDV-Like Signs in Pigs. Porcine epidemic diarrhea virus (PEDV) infection is a leading cause of severe diarrhea and mortality in piglets, leading to tremendous economic losses in the swine industry. The standard methods to detect and isolate PEDV in the clinical samples of pigs, such as suckling piglet diarrhea and fecal swabs, are time consuming and cumbersome. In addition, they often require high-power and costly laboratory equipment. In order to reduce the time spent on each detection and isolation step, we first developed a novel, static environmental chamber (SEC) to simulate the clinical signs of pigs infected with PEDV. Unlike the conventional incubation methods, the SEC made it possible to obtain PEDV-like feces that remain unchanged in appearance for up to 24 h at 4°C. In addition, the SEC also eliminates the need for a constant supply of carbon dioxide and has a smaller footprint than conventional, portable incubators. It is the first SEC that allows for the detection of PEDV in feces while at 4°C. The SEC showed an improved ability to amplify the PEDV-specific mRNA compared to conventional PCR methods. Furthermore, we established a standard operating procedure for the SEC that can be used in various laboratories to detect PEDV in various samples. Lastly, the SEC can be easily transported, and the area used can be less than that of conventional incubators. In conclusion, the SEC can be used as a rapid, sensitive and robust method to isolate PEDV and can serve as a useful tool for other laboratories to achieve a better understanding of PEDV and other viral infections of the gastrointestinal tract.
