The content/mymodule.xsl file contains the following code: How I can fix this error? A: The problem is the referenced site.registry.settings is in a module. So the import statement only works if the site.registry.settings module is located on the same python import path as the specified url template file. You can fix this by: Taking one of the following steps: 1- Add the site.registry.settings to your site package directly. (Inside any of the modules). 2- specify the site.registry.settings to be the relative path site.registry.settings instead of the absolute site.registry.settings (i.e.: site.registry.settings/site.registry.settings) What's happening is that the system is searching the python path, looking for the site.registry.settings relative to the current directory, so in your case the error is happening in site.registry.settings where the site.registry.settings.site module is located at the moment. So if you move the site.registry.settings module to another directory, the search path is updated and the name site
