The present invention pertains to a dual-circuit power supply system having means for monitoring and detecting the presence of a load having an output current greater than a predetermined value. Electronic devices and equipment are typically powered by a direct current (DC) power supply system including one or more DC power supplies and a main output circuit coupled to the one or more DC power supplies. A DC power supply is typically a voltage source having a relatively high DC voltage and a relatively low DC current. A DC power supply is generally a three-terminal device that includes a first terminal for receiving the AC input voltage, a second terminal for providing the DC output voltage, and a third terminal for ground. As will be appreciated, the second terminal has two terminals, a positive terminal and a negative terminal. The positive terminal is coupled to the positive terminal of the AC input voltage source, and the negative terminal is coupled to the negative terminal of the AC input voltage source. In some systems, the AC input voltage source is a 60 Hz or 50 Hz line current or the input voltage is rectified and a pulse width modulated (PWM) signal is generated on a primary winding of the AC power supply. A high frequency transformer is coupled to the second terminal of the AC input voltage source. The transformer has a primary winding that is coupled to a first winding of the AC input voltage source and a secondary winding that is coupled to the second terminal of the DC power supply. As will be appreciated, the first winding of the AC voltage source is a portion of a primary winding of the high frequency transformer. In many cases, for the circuit to function properly, the DC current in the secondary winding should be less than some predetermined value. When the DC current is greater than the predetermined value, the ability of the secondary winding to provide the power to the load device is reduced, which may result in damage to the load or the power supply. In other words, the load may draw current that exceeds the rated capacity of the secondary winding of the transformer. For example, assuming that the secondary winding of the transformer provides 550 milliamperes (MA) of output current, and that a load includes a resistance of 10 ohms coupled to the secondary winding, then 550 MA × 10 ohms = 550 watts, which exceeds the rated output power of the transformer. In order to protect power supply circuits, such as DC power supply circuits, from damage caused by high current conditions, conventional power supply circuits include a thermal overload or power shutdown circuit to be activated by

Q: Finding data elements based on a value within array and its position I am constructing a gaming site. On this site, players can collect tokens for certain conditions they meet during the game. One token can have up to ten conditions. The four relevant ones are the following: Lucky Strike. Players get one Lucky Strike token every 6 turns Struggle. Players get one Struggle token every 4 turns Win. Players get one Win token every 2 turns Underdog. Players get one Underdog token every 4 turns As a game progresses, players will keep adding Lucky Strikes, Struggles and Wins tokens to their card until the game ends and they get their final payout. However, the Underdog token can only be applied during the first four turns of the game. Example: After the first 4 turns, Player 1 has Lucky Strike, Struggle, Win and Underdog tokens. After the next 6 turns, Player 2 will get 6 tokens as well. To apply an Underdog token at a certain turn, one needs to determine if the player has 5 or more tokens. I want to be able to show the Underdog token on the players' cards by identifying the tokens that the player has based on their turn, i.e. turn token condition -------------------------------- 4 Lucky Strike 5 8

Struggler 6 8 Underdog 6 Question: How do I go about using PHP to get this information and arrange it in the way I described above? Note: The tokens are stored in the database with fields like ID, player_ID, type and condition. A: In any language, you would need to determine the last turn and the number of tokens that you currently have. The player details could be maintained in a data structure like this: struct Player { int tokenCount; int lastTurn; } Your condition would be the value of the tokens. If it is underdog, you would have a boolean true or false, and if it is the other conditions you could set the value to an integer representing the number of tokens. The condition could be determined by checking the count of all your tokens and using an if statement

System Requirements:

Windows 7 SP1/Windows 8/8.1 Intel Core 2 Duo CPU or equivalent 3 GB of RAM 1 GB of free hard drive space DirectX 9.0c Internet Connection The game is also available for the Xbox 360 and PS3, so if you have access to one of those systems, you'll be able to check it out. As for multiplayer, it's up to you. You can have a LAN party or take it online. I personally prefer the multiplayer to be offline, but that's just
