The present invention relates to a method of transporting a liquid between two containers. More particularly, the present invention relates to a method of transporting a liquid between a container and a dispenser that can eliminate a liquid leak. The present invention relates to a liquid dispensing apparatus which includes a housing which defines a volume therein. A first transport path is defined by the housing and provides a path for first flow of a liquid from the liquid volume to a chamber within the housing. A second transport path is defined by the housing and is configured to provide a path for second flow of a liquid from the chamber to a dispensing spout. The housing has a separate component that includes a filter and can limit liquid flow through the filter. The present invention relates to a liquid dispensing apparatus which includes a housing having at least one wall defining a volume therein. The at least one wall is formed of a material selected from the group consisting of a glass, polymeric, ceramic, plastic, wood and composites thereof. The housing has a first transport path that is defined by the at least one wall and provides a path for first flow of a liquid from the liquid volume to a chamber within the housing. The housing has a second transport path that is defined by the at least one wall and configured to provide a path for second flow of a liquid from the chamber to a dispensing spout. The present invention relates to a liquid dispensing apparatus which includes a housing having a first end and a second end. The second end has a plurality of connections, the first end has a plurality of connections. The housing has a plurality of deformable partitions. The partition deformations define a plurality of separate chambers. The second end and the first end have a plurality of openings, each of the plurality of openings is formed in a corresponding one of the plurality of deformable partitions. The housing is configured to allow liquid flow from a liquid supply to the liquid dispensing apparatus through the openings while preventing a flow of liquid around each of the openings. The present invention relates to a method of transporting a liquid between a container and a dispenser which includes a liquid supply and a dispenser. The dispenser includes a housing with first and second transport paths configured for liquid flow. The method includes filling the liquid container to a predetermined volume, inserting the liquid container into the housing, then blocking both the first and second transport paths and evacuating air from the housing. The present invention relates to a method of transporting a liquid between a container and a dispenser which includes a

Q: Lebesgue integration of a monotone function Prove: If $f:[0,1]\to \mathbb{R}$ is monotone non-decreasing and $f(x)\geq 0$ for all $x\in [0,1]$ then there exists $c\in[0,1]$ such that: $$\int_0^{c}f(x)dx=\int_c^1f(x)dx$$ I will appreciate any kind of help I can get. Thanks! A: Let $\int_c^1f(x)dx=\int_0^1f(x)dx-\int_c^0f(x)dx$. Note that $0\leq\int_0^1f(x)dx-\int_c^0f(x)dx\leq \int_0^1f(x)dx$, thus $0\leq \int_c^1f(x)dx\leq \int_0^1f(x)dx$. Q: How to use $\{0,1\}^$ in a recursive definition of simple language? I'm reading about simple language and simple function, it has a nice recursive definition for $A = \{a,b,a \cup b\}$. However, in the same book, there's a formula written as: $A = \{s \in \Sigma^: \#s = 1 \land |s| = \lambda \geq 1 \land \forall s' \in \Sigma^(s' \subseteq s \bowtie s \in A \Rightarrow s' \in A)\}$, with s being a string in $\{0,1\}^$. Unfortunately, I do not know what s' is. Could you please help me decipher it? A: There are two important ideas in this definition. The first is that s' is a general string in $\{0,1\}^*$, so that s' is a string starting with the symbol 0 and following some arbitrary number of 0s and/or 1s. The second important idea is that you can
