The amount this year is lower. About 61 percent of the river has not been planted, and that may or may not have an impact on the fish. "It's hard to really say right now," said Ron Arnold, spokesman with the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. "If you have a big earthquake, that kind of goes away with it and we go back to the way it was before. But if it's a smaller earthquake or more frequent earthquakes, then you get some damage to the fish." The salmon usually migrate to the river in springtime. This year, they are reluctant to enter the river because of the seismic activity. Davis said that's one of the things the fishing cooperatives are doing. They're feeding trout to the fish and holding some back to keep breeding. "If they breed, it's a good way to help the stock and the species grow," he said. Arnold said the 10-year process of plantings is not over for the river. It
