MALDEN, Mass.: Kluwer. ♦2009. PDF. Available: it possible to reposition the dental implant in the same jaw? The purpose of this retrospective study was to determine the possible bone repositioning of implants to place the distal implant into the same bony defect as the apical implant. For the three years prior to the study, all implants placed in the Department of Periodontology at the University of

Zurich underwent a rigorous check-up. Of these implants, 28 were to be repositioned. The positioning of these implants in each jaw was compared to the positions obtained following a first-time repositioning in each jaw. The planned positioning could be achieved in 15 of the 28 cases. This success rate is encouraging and may show a shift in the implant positioning concept.Q: how to change content type of page when publishing to word document? Gillard's Australian Labor Party held power, an acquaintance of mine took me to meet her, as she did with various political acquaintances, especially when I worked as a parliamentary correspondent and columnist. I told this person: "I think you'll like Gillard," and she did. She thought Gillard was "handsome," a term she used for almost all female politicians. "There's something about her," she said. "She just has a presence." What made this person notice Gillard, the relatively young minister in charge of redressing Australia's troubled home affairs portfolio, was that she was never in her office. She would always sit behind a desk in her ministerial office. No one asked her where she went. She wasn't near Gillard, or almost anyone else. She was away in the community, and as a doctor, she wanted time off between interviews. "She hardly ever spoke in my presence," my acquaintance said. On the opposite end of the scale, I knew a woman in a large Australian media company who

This post is a poor duplicate of another. The duplicate was closed without a comment. A better duping solution would be the automatic duping answer below in combination with the duping answer's custom button: There is an even more elaborate duping solution: If a question is clearly not a duplicate (as it is here), you could flag it for moderator attention. A: Your comment on this answer explains what you did wrong: I didn't understand your answer, I thought it was for me. I've read the book, and I agree completely with you but I don't think any of the other users who posted an answer thought the same. My question wasn't for the book, it was for the answer you posted. As a result I felt like you misunderstood my question and didn't helped me. The ideal solution would be to simply close the other question as a duplicate of this one. This is what the community (i.e. other users) should do, and I think that should have been done in your case. In the last 24 hours, the Tories have made clear that they are going to be ripping up Labour's entire social insurance system - but they're not going to tell you what they're doing, and they're not going to do it in plain English. This must be a deliberate ploy - it's deliberately confusing, designed to leave Labour with no-one to blame. Now they're dragging in a few more famous names to show that they won't be ripping up our social security system. Thanks for the honour, Chris Grayling - only you, and some dodgy polling that says that social security helps people to vote Labour. OK, that makes 2 famous people - thanks, David Davis and Ian Duncan Smith! No, really, thanks. Just because we've heard Liam Byrne and Jim Murphy's views on this, and because John Reid's a Labour MP, that's no reason for you to make your opinions known. So, Labour's social security system has been criticised by a) a former deputy leader, and b) a couple of right-wing Tories with a fixation for strippers and drinking. It's a bit like the newspapers getting together to write a bad review of a TV show starring Robert Lindsay. It's basically saying 'this was a bad thing, we think'. All this announcement does is delay the inevitable - after another election defeat, another Tory administration will take charge, and
