FIFA's technical director, Yong-Soo Park, says it's the best platform to create a game that will satisfy both hardcore football fans and casual players. "It's important that a game really touches the players' hearts, and then it can move millions of people around the world," says Park. "But we have to give [the players] the tools to express themselves, and we want people to feel the emotion when they play. FUT Online will give people all the tools to show what they can do in the game." The new FIFA 22 engine allows all of the game's football stars – players, their teams, and FIFA Ultimate Team – to perform in ways that will be difficult to reproduce on consoles and PC. "We wanted to make a game that anybody could play," says Park. "We believe that when anybody can express themselves, the world becomes a better place." Check out our exclusive in-depth look at FIFA 22's new animation technology in the video above. FIFA 22 will be published by EA, which will release the game on all of the main platforms on October 26th. However, the game will first release on PlayStation 4, PS3, Xbox One and Xbox 360, and PC, before later being made available for Android and iOS tablets and mobile devices.

Establishing clinical relevance in the assessment of scaffold-based tissue engineering applications using the porcine model. Numerous in vitro and in vivo experiments have been conducted to determine the effect of scaffold-based tissue engineering (TE) applications. While the porcine model is often used for in vitro testing of tissue-engineered constructs, however, little information is known about the translation of in vivo data from porcine studies to humans. In this study, the orthotopic in vivo environment of the pig was considered in the translational assessment of scaffold-based tissue engineered products. To study the effects of scaffold-based TE, porcine model was used in both mandibular bone defect repair and liver regeneration applications. High-resolution CT scans were conducted preoperatively and at time points between 1 and 23 months postoperatively. Scaffold micropore size and volume, and changes in porosity were quantified. In vivo biopsies were taken at the same time points and scaffold degradation was

To get close to the 'footballing spirit' of football, we try to stay authentic and realistic in our simulation. We've added a number of rules to make football more exciting. For example, when a player loses possession, another will try to take control of the ball. This automatically unlocks defensive counters like a 'false 9', and the last player in possession will be sent out on a run.
