The process of using Photoshop starts with choosing which files you wish to open, editing and saving them. Each document has a small menu bar at the top of the main screen for quick access to the Photoshop commands. There are two types of documents in Photoshop: Layouts: These are documents in which you can apply a few commands to create new files. Photographs: These are the actual images you take and need to be edited. Once you have selected the document you want to work on, it is time to use the tools in Photoshop to manipulate the images and create new ones. You can crop images, add text or certain effects, change the size of the images and create new documents. If you need to get from A to Z, then you need to use the following shortcuts: Ctrl+A:

Selects the whole image Ctrl+C: Copy the image Ctrl+X: Cut the image Ctrl+V: Paste the image

Using "Smart Objects" If you need to apply an effect to a specific area of an image, instead of applying it to the whole image, you can use Smart Objects. These are like clickable boxes that allow you to make changes to a specific area of the image. This way you can crop out parts of the image, for example, and save them as a separate file. Using the Ruler Tool To help you find your way around images and Photoshop, you need to use the Ruler tool. The Ruler tool appears in the top-right of the screen. To use the Ruler tool, select it with your mouse, drag to a corner of the screen and then release the mouse button. The tool appears in the selected corner, and if you move the tool to a side of the screen, it will automatically snap to the side of the screen. The Ruler tool tells you the size of the images on the screen and the distance to the corner of the screen. To switch back to the main screen, you can select another tool by using the arrow keys on your keyboard. Navigating through an image When you want to navigate through the layers and layers of an image, you use the eye

Milton S. Weinberg Milton S. Weinberg (January 4, 1913 - December 13, 2002) was an American lawyer and legal administrator. Weinberg was the first clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States, served as the first law clerk of Chief Justice Earl Warren, and became the General Counsel of the National Security Council in the Johnson and Nixon Administrations. Early life Weinberg was born in the City of London, England, in 1913 to Jewish immigrants from Germany, who were also American citizens. He was the youngest of four children. He attended King's College, Cambridge, was president of the Cambridge Union Society, and graduated with a BA degree from Harvard University in 1934. He returned to the United States and was admitted to the Illinois bar in 1935. He worked briefly at a law firm in New York City before taking a job in the Office of Alien Property, when America was at war with Germany. Legal career During the war years, Weinberg began his legal career as a member of the Office of Alien Property in New York. He started as an administrative assistant and was eventually made a deputy commissioner. After the war ended, he continued to work in the Office of Alien Property in Washington, D.C. There, he became a lawyer in private practice and a special assistant in the Department of Justice. In 1952, Justice Felix Frankfurter appointed Weinberg a clerk to the Supreme Court. He left the Court in 1956 and became clerk of the District Court for the Southern District of New York. In 1958, Weinberg was appointed the chief counsel of the Office of National Estimates. There he developed a reputation for supporting the unorthodox, often at odds with official government policy and consistently referred to as "Weinbergism". In this position, he was asked to do legal research, draft opinions, and eventually was appointed to serve as the general counsel of the National Security Council (NSC). He did the same work for the Department of Defense. Weinberg was also appointed to several boards, including the Foreign Policy Association, the Council on Foreign Relations and the Center for the Study of the Presidency. In 1960, President John F.
