Dracula Becomes Your Personal Physician Swipe This Several years back I had a friend from school who came to visit me every month with a serious medical problem. The problem was he was in a lot of pain and just couldn't afford to go back to his family doctor, even though they were the ones who were seeing him regularly. The way he described it to me was like a friend who is seeing you when you have a cold or flu, except this was every month and at the end of each month he would be back with a very depressing and alarming diagnosis: "Well Dr. DRACULA, it's me again, and this month it's worse than ever." Naturally it would end with him slapping me on the back and saying "thanks Dr. DRACULA, thanks a lot, thanks a million, you don't know what you have done." It was fascinating how this guy made himself dependent on me and the minute I didn't want to treat him, he would find a new doctor - until now, a couple of years later, he is still my patient and I am his doctor and he loves my practice. He has become completely dependent on me and my practice. They don't call it a health crisis for nothing. When you get to that situation and you are no longer able to be your own doctor, your own medical advocate, then it is time to call another doctor or a health care professional. If you are not one of the lucky ones who have a health care plan with a regular doctor, or one of those unfortunate ones who has become so dependent on your doctor that you feel you will never be able to find another to take care of your health care needs, then you really do have a crisis. If you are one of the many folks who are now depending on the internet for your medical information and you get sick, you are truly in a crisis. You may not be looking for a personal physician, but if your health care crisis comes suddenly, you will have to find one or get enough information to make an appointment and go to your regular doctor, who will, with or without an appointment, take care of you. If you need a prescription for a certain medication, it is your responsibility to get an appointment with your doctor - to protect your health care, you need to do what you are supposed to do to keep your

The Round Brush is often used to round off edges and curves. If you want a perfect circle, use the Ellipse tool. Brushes are a relatively easy tool to use. A brush creates a new layer in your image. Any changes you make to the brush, such as increasing or decreasing the size, are made to this layer. All you need to do is select the brush tool and begin painting. For this lesson, you will learn how to draw a brush using the Ellipse tool. We will start by creating a rough circle to use as an example. The first step is to use the Ellipse tool to draw a circle. The trick with drawing a circle is to ensure that you set the number of segments to 16, because this will produce a perfect circle. Then, while the circle is selected, press Enter (Return on the Mac) to select all of the pixels in the circle. Now that the circle is selected, you can use a soft brush to paint within the circle. The brush has a radius that is determined by the distance between the center of the brush and the perimeter of the circle. For more info, see this Adobe Photoshop tutorial or this Adobe Photoshop tutorial. The Ellipse tool is very versatile. You can use it to create a perfect circle, a perfect square, a perfect hexagon, or even a perfect diamond, depending on the size you set. If you need to make a circle that is not perfectly round, use the Rectangular Marquee tool to create the shape, fill it in with a soft brush, and then crop it to remove the rounded corners. The next step is to create a new image with a new layer. To do this, press Ctrl+Alt+N, and then select New to create a new, blank image. Don't worry if the image is not completely white; it will grow as you paint. To turn your brush into a fill, select the Stroke tool and change the stroke to be a solid color. You can change the color, or even make it a bit transparent. Press the V key to see how many colors are in the gradient. You can use the color picker to select a color. When you are happy with your stroke and its color, click OK to create a new layer. On the Layers panel, right-click (or Control+click) on the layer and select Make Layer Fill. Alternatively, you can use the eyed
