My data has a column of IDs that I want to select columns R1, R2, R3 and S1, S2, S3. Here's my code and it only returns the first one: df[c("R1", "R2", "R3", "S1", "S2", "S3")] A: Using base R, we can use a for loop with lapply: inds % mutate(id_number = strsplit(paste(ID, collapse = ','), ",")) %>% unnest(id_number) %>% select(-id_number) are welcome to visit. As a final note, we would like to remind the reader that a several techniques have been proposed in the literature to deal with the non-Gaussian noise and CMB fluctuations related problems. We have

I was reviewing answers on this question and I found this answer that was highly voted, but I believe it's not constructive. What do you think? A: I thought it was an interesting answer, and highly voted. It's not perfect, but it's detailed, precise, and even came from a "different side" (the author of the question) than most of the answers. I didn't vote to delete it, since I think it's still a good answer. A: My vote is to leave the question as it is and make the answer community wiki. The answer would be deleted if only someone would support the deletion of the answer, since the question is community wiki. To keep the question as it is, keep the answer - with slight changes to the way it is phrased, and add this comment: this answer is community wiki, because it contains a lot of "Ask another question" inside the answers. The original author can't delete it. Write an essay on the topic: Historical periodization by Jurjen Altenberg.. Nicolae Densusianu (Dacia) Latin Texts. Sustakowo, 2008Â . View Nicolae Densusianu Dacia Preistorica Online or Download PDFÂ .TikTok, the Chinese-owned video platform launched in 2016, has been implicated in spreading misinformation and fake news in the ongoing US presidential election. Fake news spreads a lot faster than real news. It is therefore reasonable to assume that fake news that is created on China's TikTok platform will be spread a lot faster, given that it is a tool used by billions of users. (C) Global Times TikTok, an app that is often used by teenagers and young adults, was banned in mainland China last month. That ban may have been effective at containing the spread of misinformation, but it might also be contributing to the spread of misinformation. Examining the data suggests that although China blocked access to a Chinese-owned app last month, TikTok users in China and around the world still had access to the platform and to the content on it. That means that if they accessed the platform to report misinformation, they are almost certainly still doing so. China may also have had doubts about blocking access to the platform, given the large number of users and the potential for them to spread information. That might have led to certain users accessing the platform, but reporting the content when they did. The problem is that although China is filtering content from the platform, they aren't filtering the origin of it. They are able to filter the final destination, but they can't filter the route by which content was created or shared. It is likely that TikTok users access the platform to check out the content that is popular on the platform right now, from cat videos to funny TikTok videos. The content that is shared on TikTok is almost certainly not the only content that is being spread on the platform. There's a growing group of content creators who upload their videos on YouTube or Facebook. But when content is uploaded to TikTok, it is spread much more efficiently, as that is the platform's core strength. It is therefore possible that even though TikTok is being blocked in China, the information it contains may still be spreading to users around the world. If that is the case
