Months after the American Pregnancy Association announced support for the Equal Rights Amendment, the Amendment still languished in a U.S. Senate committee. Was it dead? On a recent Sunday, Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-KY) and his caucus took to the chamber's floor in an effort to seize on several state-level anti-abortion bills currently working their way through various state legislatures. The effort was met with backlash across the nation, as the Republican majority in state legislatures tried to force nearly all provisions of the bill through. Before the Senate moved on the issue, the Senate Judiciary Committee held a public hearing on the Equal Rights Amendment. Now, by contrast, a majority of the Republican senators on that committee appear to be ready to "bring up and send to the full Senate floor," as Rachel told us on the Squawk Box market wrap. The Congress passed the ERA in 1972 with support from overwhelming majorities of Democrats and Republicans. Now it is the sole focus of feminists who have long pushed for its approval. "The plight of women has been described by many who have dedicated their lives to women's rights, including Patty Stonesifer, who was the Executive Director of the National Women's Political Caucus until she was defeated by one vote in the U.S. House of Representatives in 2010," Congresswoman Betty McCollum (D-MN) wrote in The Huffington Post after the committee hearing. "Only once the country and women's rights advocates had a chance to provide testimony under oath before the Senate Judiciary Committee on the Equal Rights Amendment was it placed on the Judiciary Committee's agenda." And things look good for its approval. McConnell, known as the "grim reaper" for his tactics to rid the Senate of any remaining Democratic seats, believes there is enough Republican support for the ERA to support a unanimous-consent vote of support on the floor of the Senate.
