Thursday, November 12, 2010 Ellen DeGeneres and the Outsourcing of Transgender Advocacy If you've been watching television for the last decade or so, chances are you've probably seen Ellen DeGeneres do pretty much anything. Perhaps you've even seen her portray a character who was transgender. One such portrayal was on the ABC sitcom that followed DeGeneres as a hard-working, career-oriented, single woman, "Person of Interest," in which the titular character, played by Main co-star Jim Caviezel, was a transwoman. Last week, Ellen, in her own way, took a stand against the erasure of transgender visibility. The occasion was Ellen's annual "Ellen" Children's Charities Day, which has raised over $6 million for charity. On the day, Ellen donned a Mickey Mouse tie and wore a magenta princess dress in honor of the charity's efforts in the fight against AIDS and, according to Ellen's press release, "the importance of a healthy environment for children in Africa." In an interview with TMZ, Ellen said that she was "really surprised" to hear that Disney princesses wore Mickey Mouse ties and that the dress she wore was "not by them." "It's really not," she said. "It's by the Ellen, Ellen, Ellen, Ellen," which is a line that DeGeneres 1cdb36666d
