Roblox is a virtual world for users to program and play games. Users create and design virtual content and experience "what could be" with other users and content created by other users. Roblox has in-game purchases to speed up game loading times, and contains an option to create an official group, which is a room with many players connected. A player's avatar has the ability to roam the land, and they can customize that avatar with various items available in-game. User types may be created, which are role-based groups. Users may gain status or reputation by "forming" with another user or group of users. The status and reputation indicate where the user falls on a scale of Moral, Creative, and Technical. Roblox is released under a copyright license (CC BY-NC-SA 4.0) designed to promote creative gameplay and broad sharing of content. The license allows players to use, mod, and redistribute games, in addition to the creation of plugins and modifications. Users may also create and release their own games, using Lua and the Roblox engine. Roblox uses a virtual currency, Robux, which are purchasable in-game.
